Conclusions on the situation of children and armed conflict in Colombia

1. At its 61st meeting, on 9 January 2017, the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict examined the third report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Colombia (S/2016/837), covering the period from September 2011 to June 2016, which was introduced by the Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict. The Permanent Representative of Colombia to the United Nations also addressed the Working Group.
2. The members of the Working Group welcomed the report of the Secretary-General, submitted in accordance with Security Council resolutions 1612 \(2005\), 1882 \(2009\), 1998 \(2011\), 2068 \(2012\), 2143 \(2014\) and 2225 \(2015\), and took note of the analysis and recommendations contained therein.
3. The members of the Working Group welcomed the progress made and steps taken by the Government of Colombia to address violations and abuses committed against children in the context of armed conflict in Colombia, contributing to an overall decrease in conflict intensity, including the dialogue with armed groups and legislative developments to advance the protection of children affected by armed conflict. The members of the Working Group encouraged the Government to continue its efforts to improve the protection of children in the context of armed conflict, in particular the prevention of the recruitment and use or the rerecruitment and use of children by armed groups, in violation of international law, the reintegration of children separated from all armed groups and the investigation and prosecution of violations and abuses committed against children. The members of the Working Group noted with appreciation that the peace agreement sets as guiding principles the best interest of the child, the treatment of separated children as victims and the focus on family and community-based reintegration, and looked forward to its full implementation so that it could serve as a model for the protection of children in other peace processes.
4. Further to the meeting, and subject to and consistent with applicable international law and relevant Security Council resolutions, including resolutions 1612 \(2005\), 1882 \(2009\), 1998 \(2011\), 2068 \(2012\), 2143 \(2014\) and 2225 \(2015\), the Working Group agreed to the direct action set out below.

Statement by the Permanent Representative of Colombia to the United Nations on the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Colombia (S/2016/837), made at the sixty-first formal meeting of the Working Group on Children and Armed Conflict

Mr. Chair and members of the Working Group,

Madam Special Representative of the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict,

Mr. Director of Emergency Programmes of the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF),

I would like to congratulate Sweden and Ambassador Olof Skoog on assuming the presidency of the Security Council and the chair of the Working Group. I thank you, Sir, for convening this meeting and for the opportunity to present the comments of my Government on the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict in Colombia.

Colombia appreciates the interest of the Secretary-General and of his Special Representative in the situation of children and adolescents in the internal armed conflict in Colombia and is grateful for the hard work done by Leila Zerrougui to guarantee the rights of so many children who have been harmed by the conflict, for your recognition of the progress made and for the recommendations contained in the report, which we will take very seriously.

Mr. Chair,

In a complex context such as the Colombian one, after more than 50 years of internal armed conflict, which has left a significant number of victims, including severely impacted children and adolescents, the Colombian State is committed to moving forward and has been taking steps to protect the victims' rights.

You may recall that Colombia voluntarily agreed to participate in the monitoring and reporting mechanism established pursuant to Security Council resolution 1612 (2005), aware of the critical situation in which many children were living owing to the internal conflict.

Since the adoption of that resolution, more than a decade ago, Colombia has made substantial progress that is clearly recognized in the report and has resulted in laws, policies and programmes that are essential to our institutions today.

I would like to mention only four of those laws, policies and programmes: first, the policy on the prevention of the recruitment and use of children and adolescents, launched in 2007 through the establishment of the intersectoral commission for the prevention of the recruitment and use of and sexual violence against children and adolescents, whose institutional architecture and functions were updated in October 2016, almost a decade later, to strengthen its work in the new context of a post-conflict Colombia in line with the recommendations contained in the report.

Second, the specialized care programme for the restoration of the rights of child and adolescent victims of unlawful recruitment who are no longer involved in illegal organized groups, which has made it possible to provide care for 6,110 children and adolescents since 1999, the year in which it was established, and for 1,500 during the period covered by the present report.

Third, National Council on Economic and Social Policy document No. 3673, which you highlight in your report and through which 21 entities that are members of the intersectoral commission reported on 85 permanent and temporary plans, strategies, programmes, projects and strategic actions in at least 1,082 municipalities intended to prevent the recruitment and use of and sexual violence against children and adolescents.

Lastly, two substantive pieces of legislation: Law. No. 1098 (2006) — the Childhood and Adolescence Code — and, of course, the flagship Law No. 1448 (2011) on victims' rights. Both are innovative and pioneering laws on the protection of children.

Mr. Chair,

If there has been one significant development since September 2011, it is the humanitarian demining agreement, the first agreement implemented jointly by the army of Colombia and the Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia (FARC). Following initial pilot experiments in three villages, the agreement now covers the 50 most affected municipalities, where antipersonnel mines pose the greatest threat and where so many children have been maimed.

The figures are revealing: the number of children harmed by mines fell from 119 in 2012 to 3 in 2016. Our goal is for not one single child to be harmed.

This improvement was made possible thanks to the tenacity of the Government of President Santos, which, for four years, pursued a negotiated end to the internal conflict in Colombia. After many trials and tribulations, those efforts bore fruit with the signing on 24 November 2016 of the Final Agreement for Ending the Conflict and Building a Stable and Lasting Peace.

With the support of the Security Council and the Secretary-General, through the special political mission, it will be possible for all FARC members, including minors, to be in the 26 transitional local zones for normalization on 30 January 2017, with a ceasefire in place and the total cessation of hostilities, and the beginning of the disarmament of all combatants, which must conclude in 180 days.

It is clear that this situation, which we Colombians are experiencing for the first time after 52 years of internal conflict, will create a calmer and more secure climate, with fewer attacks, less internal displacement and an increased presence in terms of State institutions, including schools and hospitals, in particular in rural areas. In addition, post-conflict programmes that will inevitably result in a significant decrease in the number of situations with a potential for the forced recruitment, use and exploitation of and sexual violence against children and adolescents, the abduction, maiming and killing of children, and attacks on schools, which we are committed to leaving in our past, will be implemented.

We are also aware that there are other forms of violence in Colombia, and the Government has therefore embarked on a process of negotiation with the other armed group in the country, the National Liberation Army, which we hope will bear fruit.

The agreement signed with FARC took into account international standards on the protection of children and adolescents and prohibited, among other things, the granting of amnesties or pardons for the crime of recruitment of minors.

Mr. Chair,

With the support of Ms. Zerrougui, a commitment was obtained from FARC to begin the process of returning child soldiers, beginning with a group of 13 children who were received and cared for at a temporary reception centre under the permanent supervision of the competent authorities and with the support of UNICEF and the International Organization for Migration (IOM). After a process of psychosocial support, four were reunited with their families and seven were sent to care homes.

Thanks to the special political mission and the Government, the children who remain in the hands of FARC will hand over their weapons and will be surveyed and registered to ascertain their place of origin and family composition and to allow monitoring until their full reintegration.

Mr. Chair,

Notwithstanding the encouraging figures and undeniable progress made by my country, we know that there is still a long way to go. For that reason, in order to strengthen protective environments to reduce risk factors, Colombia will continue to work on strategies and actions to implement these policies in such a way as to strengthen families, the educational community and civil society for the benefit of children, from the upholding of their rights to their recognition as subjects of rights.

My country hopes to continue to count on the support of the Office of the Special Representative and such United Nations agencies as UNICEF and IOM, and we reiterate our commitment to complying with the obligation of the State to protect fully the best interests and the rights of children and adolescents.

With the unflinching determination of my Government and with your support, we hope that we can finally conclude our participation in this mechanism of the Security Council.

Thank you.
